Manager Comment

The performance of the fund in March was -4.81% (Institutional class).

US equities performance was negative during the month. Major indices struggled to maintain previous gains as investors reconsidered growth expectations and the timing of interest rate cuts. Technology sector continued to underperform, affected by higher yields, while more defensive sectors such as healthcare and consumer staples showed relative resilience. Eurozone equities delivered modest gains, although performance was more uneven than in February. However, cyclical sectors faced some pressure due to weaker growth expectations and ongoing geopolitical uncertainty. UK equities posted slightly positive returns. The market benefited from its exposure to energy and financial sectors, as well as relatively attractive valuations. Emerging market equities showed mixed performance with the Asian markets remained relatively strong, but other emerging regions experienced volatility.

The fund bought and sold multiple equity securities, keeping the US equity allocation to around 35% and the European equity allocation to around 15%.

Fixed income markets volatility increased during the month. Government bond yields moved higher, particularly in the US, reflecting persistent inflation and lower expectations of interest rate cuts in the short term. Rising yields and fewer expectations of rate cuts caused a widening in credit spreads, especially at the end of the month, showing a more cautious investor sentiment.

The fund was quite active for the bond side, with a balanced allocation among govies (11%), IG (16%) and HY (12%).

Outlook: The outlook for Q2 2026 is uncertain. Global growth is expected to slow slightly, with risks coming mainly from geopolitical tensions, especially in the Middle East. Disruptions in energy supply are pushing oil prices higher, which could increase inflation again. The US economy is still expected to be the main driver of global growth, supported by strong consumer demand and a solid labour market. However, high interest rates could start to weigh on growth over time. The Eurozone is likely to grow more slowly, as higher energy costs and uncertainty affect both consumers and businesses. Overall, markets are expected to remain highly sensitive to economic data, central bank decisions and geopolitical developments, which could lead to continued volatility.
